This shows the advantage of fall plowing combined with does not pay to have a grop of wheat does not pay to have a grop of wheat thus destroyed, while it will pay to plow and sow some cheaper grain that will answer the same purpose. There is probably a good deal of loss of aumenia from naked fields in winter and early spring which a growing crop would save. The young rye plowed under in April would form an excellent and well distributed coating of manure over the field-much more valuable tion its probable cost. On land designed for corn or potatoes, the rye could be left to grow till the middle of May, or be Pastured by cows, or ewes with young lambs. It is better that the ground should be left as rough as possible after the fall sowing. Spring feed for cows is ed, before they begin to ghize. First sould them half an hour in sail pickle, often searce, and two or three acres of young rye, intended for pasture on land designed for summer crops, will be a clear gain, at a very triding expense. ORCHARD GRASS,-Judging from the inquiries received, the interest in this kind of grass is on the increase. Its value seems to be variously estimated by those who have used it. Some complain that it makes harsh, woody buy; this is probably due to allowing it to become too ripe before culting.
